this book investigates the syntax and usage of fragments morgan 1973 apparently subsentential utterances like a coffee please which fulfill the same communicative function as the corresponding full sentence i d like to have a coffee please even though such utterances are frequently used they challenge the central role that has been attributed to the notion of sentence in linguistic theory particularly from a semantic perspective the first part of the book is dedicated to the syntactic analysis of fragments which is investigated with experimental methods currently there are several competing theoretical analyses of fragments which rely almost only on introspective data the experiments presented in this book constitute a first systematic evaluation of some of their crucial predictions and taken together support an in situ ellipsis account of fragments as has been suggested by reich 2007 the second part of the book addresses the questions of why fragments are used at all and under which circumstances they are preferred over complete sentences syntactic accounts impose licensing conditions on fragments but they do not explain why fragments are sometimes dis preferred provided that their usage is licensed this book proposes an information theoretic account of fragments which predicts that the usage of fragments is constrained by a general tendency to distribute processing effort uniformly across the utterance with respect to fragments this leads to two predictions which are empirically confirmed speakers tend towards omitting predictable words and they insert additional redundancy before unpredictable words
